FOREWORD

This Historical Directory of Saskatchewan Newspapers represents the first effort ever made to compile a list of all the newspapers published in this province in the period since 1878, the year in which the first paper, The Saskatchewan Herald, was established. Many papers have come and gone since 1878; some completely forgotten and all copies destroyed; others are but memories. The vicissitudes of the newspaper business are abundantly evident from the fact that of the 493 papers listed in this directory, only some 112 are currently being published.

The preparation of this directory has been undertaken with three purposes in mind: to provide basic information for the study of newspaper publishing in Saskatchewan; to assist students of local history; and to aid the efforts of the Office of the Saskatchewan Archives in locating files for microfilming.

The compiler (who is a member of the staff of the Legislative Library) and the publisher make no claim that the information contained in this directory is complete, although every known source has been consulted. We hope that the publication of the information already obtained may lead some readers to supply additional facts which can be incorporated in a more definitive edition. Such persons are invited to communicate with the Provincial Archivist.

No attempt has been made in the present edition to indicate where holdings of these newspapers may be found. A considerable proportion of the papers established prior to 1900 are now available up to 1900 or 1905 on microfilm in the Office of the Saskatchewan Archives. The files of most weeklies published since 1943 are available on microfilm in the Legislative Library. Apart from these holdings, the files (where they still exist) will be found in the publishers' offices. A high proportion of the short lived papers have had their files partially or completely destroyed. The Provincial Archivist would welcome any information on the whereabouts of partial or complete files of papers which are no longer published, so that they might be included in the microfilming project.

Lewis H. Thomas
Provincial Archivist

INTRODUCTION

For the years since 1913 a large part of the information included in this directory was obtained from files in the office of the Provincial Secretary. Saskatchewan's Libel and Slander Act requires from every newspaper published in the province an annual return to the Provincial Secretary giving the title of the newspaper and the names of the proprietor, editor and publisher. Although the Act was first passed in 1909, the files for the most part date from 1913. McKim's Directory of Canadian Newspapers, although not free from inaccuracies, was a valuable source, especially for the period before 1913. Newspapers available in the Legislative Library and microfilm copies in the Saskatchewan Archives were consulted for particulars of the early years and also for the years 1943. to date. Requests for information which were sent to many of the present publishers or editors of the weekly newspapers met with some success. Stray bits of information were picked up in such sources as biographies, letterheads, early editions of the Canadian Almanac, and references in contemporary newspapers.

While The Libel and Slander Act required that the Provincial Secretary be notified within 10 days after changes of proprietor, editor or publisher occur, many such changes were shown only by the appearance of different names in the annual returns. Consequently those changes could be indicated by year only, and even these in some cases may be an approximation. Similarly, the Provincial Secretary has been rarely provided with the exact date on which a newspaper has ceased publication so that often the year of the last annual return provided the sole clue as to when the paper went out of business.

Arrangement of the entries is according to place of publication. If a newspaper has been published in more than one community, it appears, with one or two exceptions, under the latest place of publication. The name of the place of publication, when it forms part of the name of the paper, is omitted from the entry. Thus the Wadena Herald is entered under Wadena, the place of publication, as Herald.

Although, as indicated in the title, 1950 is the concluding year of the period covered, a few changes which have occurred during 1951 have been incorporated in the directory.

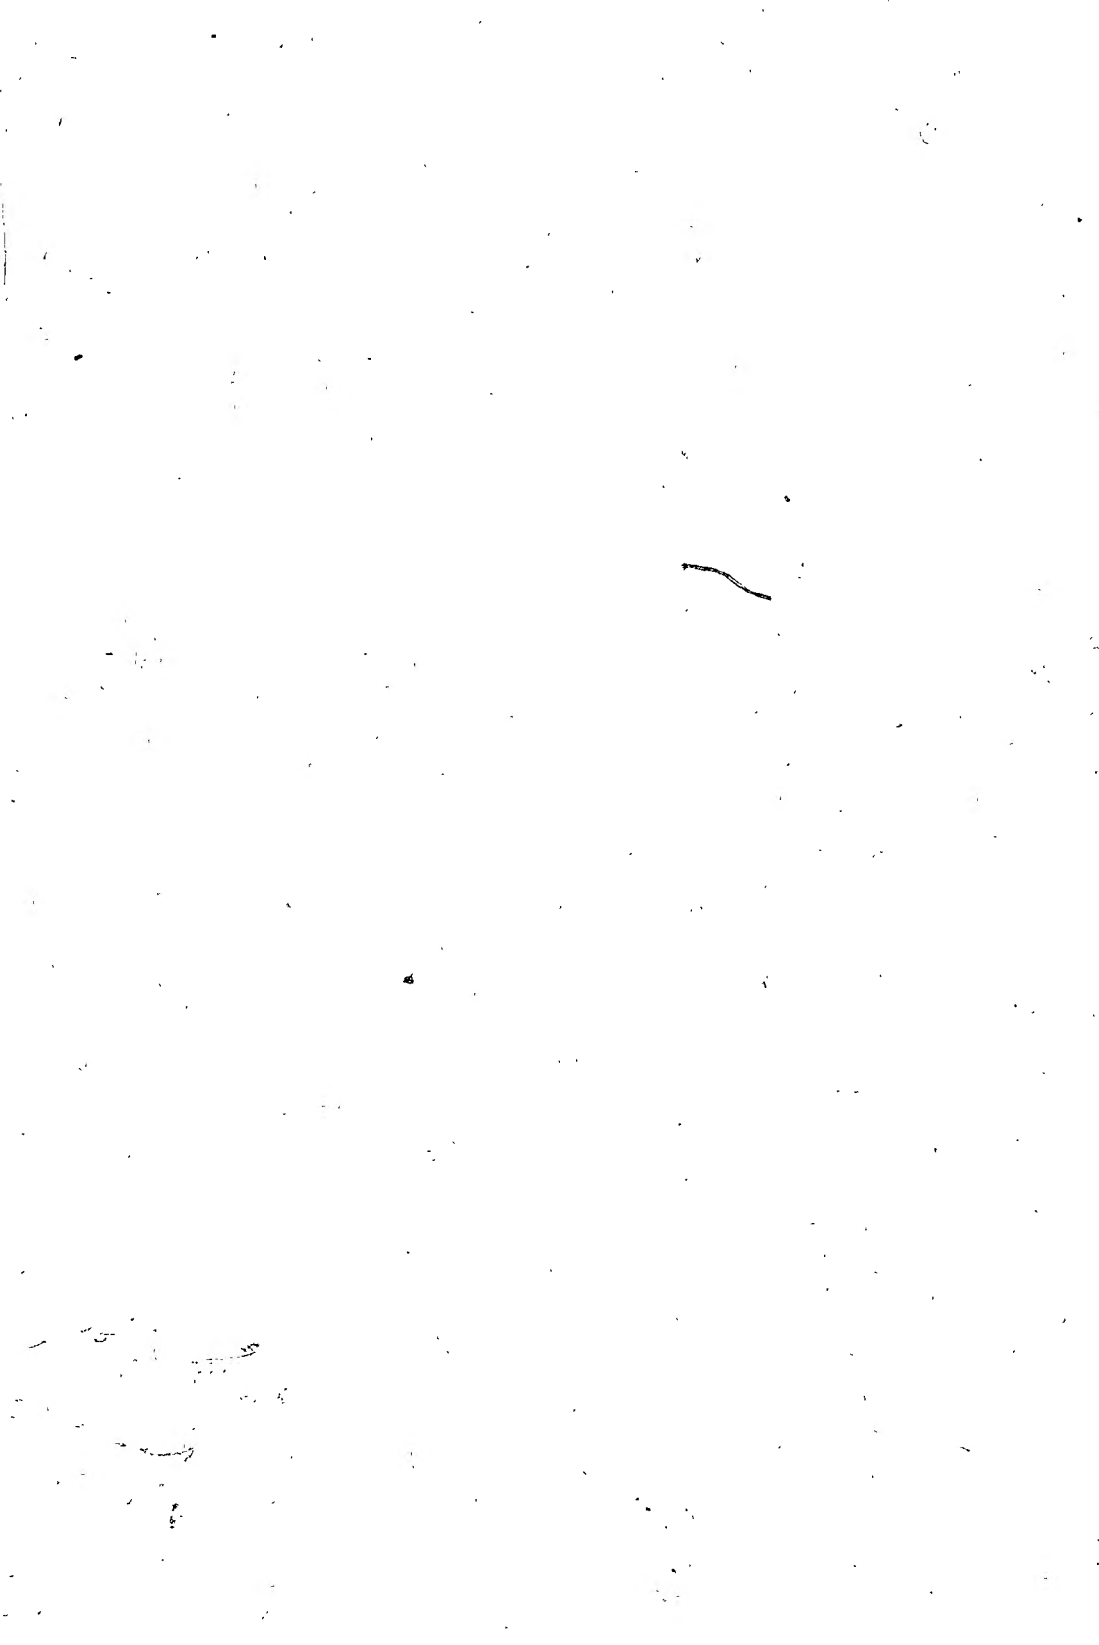

Because files of most of the papers have not been available for examination, it has been difficult to establish definitely in every case whether or not a publication should be classed as a newspaper. Consequently a few publications may be found in the directory which properly should not have been included.
